Children removed from school after bestiality lesson

A mother has removed her three children from a South Australian government school where kids learnt about bestiality:

Ms Gaylard, 40, said she planned to enrol Courtney, her younger sister and her older brother in a private school next term.

Courtney, 14, told The Advertiser that she and her classmates were not told what the session would be about before entering the room.

“We just got sent there and just got talked at about all this yucky stuff,” she said.

“It should not have been anywhere near our ears.

“I just wanted to leave the whole time.”

“There need to be serious consequences for this appalling incident,” FamilyVoice spokesman David d’Lima said.

“Schools operate in the place of parents, who must reclaim their role to ensure the safe education of their children.”
