Family group backs church's anti-woke stance

FamilyVoice Australia has welcomed the key concerns raised recently by Millicent Baptist Church about Wattle Range Council pushing rainbow propaganda.

"Since flags flown officially should unite the entire community, council flagpoles should fly the national, state and municipal banners, instead of promoting niche and destructive left-wing causes," said South Australian FamilyVoice director David d'Lima.

FamilyVoice notes that the low levels of participation in local government elections may have disconnected councils from ordinary ratepayers.

"Use of municipal flagpoles to promote the same-sex agenda, or any other allegedly important purpose, can only further alienate local government from the mainstream community," David d'Lima said.

"The rainbow flag comes with a lot of political baggage that councils should not align themselves with."
