SA Government must stop woke behaviour

The South Australian government decision to remove the names “Christmas Day” and “Anzac Day” from the official calendar of South Australian public holidays is an example of “work bureaucratic behaviour” that must be rescinded, according to FamilyVoice Australia.

“Removing the names of public holidays by the South Australian government is no simple matter of semantics, but reveals a deep-seated bureaucratic ambition to rob the culture of its valuable foundations,” FamilyVoice spokesman David d’Lima said.

“For many years, people who would deny our heritage have expressed their irritation by refusing to name the occasion to be celebrated, and now the problem is compounded by government.

“Christmas greetings increasingly have become replaced with the nebulously wishful ‘Happy holidays’ and in woke circles, the Queen’s Birthday (now that of the King) long ago became ‘the June long weekend’.

Now Christmas Day, Anzac Day, Australia Day and other public holidays officially will be un-named within government listings.

“Who does the government think it is?” David d’Lima asked.

“All the occasions commemorated or celebrated throughout the year long-predate the current crop of MPs and bureaucrats who temporarily occupy their esteemed positions.

“They surely should safeguard and honour our cultural traditions.

“It is necessary for the Malinauskas government to rescind this woke move, and instead thoroughly commend each of the holidays we enjoy here in South Australia.”
