Making Monty Python proud

FamilyVoice Australia gender spokesman David d'Lima says a South Australian parliamentary committee on stillbirth has heard evidence that the terms “women” and “men” are not meant to be exclusionary – an observation that would make the Monty Python comedy team proud.

“In a truly bizarre statement, a senior South Australian health official has told a parliamentary committee that males who have transitioned or are transitioning to become female women should be heard from regarding the loss of unborn babies,” David d'Lima said.

“The pain of prenatal loss is something no man can ever experience – a point not lost on Monty Python.

“With prescient insight in the otherwise squalid film The Life of Brian, came the wisdom that while no man can bear a child, we should nevertheless fight for the right.”
