Study Contradicts Transgender Narrative, Suggests Puberty Blockers Spike Youth Suicide

Making puberty blockers and cross-sex hormones easier for children to access has increased youth suicide rates, a new report from the Heritage Foundation has found.

The study contradicts the claims of Rainbow activists that gender-confused children need radical medical intervention in the form of puberty blockers and cross-sex hormones to prevent suicide.

The study found that “easing access to puberty blockers and cross-sex hormones by minors without parental consent increases suicide rates.”

“Confused young people need support, encouragement and counselling – not radical and harmful chemical intervention”, said FamilyVoice spokesman Greg Bondar.

“We need an urgent inquiry into the treatment of gender-confused children in Australia.
